Speakers: Host, Scott

HOST: As third year teacher at Littleton Middle School, Terry Sanders brings an infectious energy to her classroom. Both faculty and students like Terry and find it easy to get caught up in her enthusiasm, and like many young professionals her age, Terry is active in social media.

SCOTT: A lot of us here are new teachers. I think Terry is in her third year or so and most of us are still in our twenties so we all follow each other on Twitter and Facebook and Instagram and it was never a problem until about a week ago.

Her tweet said "Just saw a cop in the school parking lot with a dog. Hope they don't go near my car. # just saying hi."

HOST: Scott became more concerned about Terry when one of her posts over the weekend seemed to cross the line.

SCOTT: It was Monday morning and I had some time before my first class started and so I'm looking up what people did over the weekend and I find this photo of Terry on Instagram.

What?

It looked like she was at some kind of party. She has teachers and students who follow her. I have no idea who has seen this by now or what, if anything, I should do about it.
