Items and scores in italics are negatively weighted. For example, one of the items in the Independence scale is "I like to consult with others on important decisions." In order to get "credit" toward a high Independence score, you'd have to disagree with this item. So, a rating of "1" (does not describe you well) would be converted to a "5" before being averaged with the other items on that scale. On all negatively weighted items, 5's are converted to 1's, 4's to 2's, 2's to 4's, and 1's to 5's. Ratings of 3's, already at the mid-point of the range, remain 3's. In the report, the item scores you see represent your actual responses, that is, the ratings you gave before they were converted.

* An asterisk following a norm group score indicates that it is significantly different from the individual score on this scale.
